S&P CHITRALOK STUDIOS

PAID पालकी

WRITER & DIRECTOR: Pushpenddra Singh

Dop –Shashank Sahu,
Dialogue writer-Shashank Singh

SYNOPSIS

Set in the heart of rural Madhya Pradesh, this story follows Santu, an unmarried young man whose marriage proposals have all fallen through—some families turn him down after meeting him, while others are sent away by the villagers themselves. Santu's mother is determined that her son must marry before arranging her daughter's wedding, believing that once the daughter leaves, a daughter-in-law should be there to care for the household.

As gossip in the village grows and Santu's desperation to marry deepens, the local temple priest, Lakhan Pandit, suggests an unsettling solution: buying a bride. He introduces Santu to a broker known as "Jamai-ji," who traffics young women and demands ₹2,00,000 rupees for a match. Driven by pressure and longing, Santu agrees.

They travel to a remote, impoverished tribal settlement—cut off from the outside world and ravaged by hunger—where men purchase brides according to their means. Among the many girls shown to him, Santu is captivated by Kemli, a shy tribal girl. He pays the price and brings her home with great pomp. Over time, genuine affection blossoms between them, and Kemli begins to warm to her new life.

But one day, while Santu is away, Kemli's family forcibly takes her back. The film then follows Santu's struggle to reunite with the woman he now truly loves and Kemli's own awakening—from an illiterate, sheltered girl to a determined young woman who learns to fight for her rights.

This is a story of love emerging from exploitation, of personal transformation, and of the courage to challenge age-old traditions of poverty, patriarchy, and human trafficking.

CHARACTER SKETCH

SANTH KUMAR (SANTU)

Santu, a 27-year-old villager, lives with his widowed mother and younger sister in a modest home. Illiterate and without land or a steady source of income, he has long struggled to secure a marriage. Over the years, several proposals have come his way, but none have succeeded—some families rejected him after meeting him, while others were turned away by villagers who saw him as an unsuitable match. The pressure on Santu has grown heavier as his mother insists that her daughter's wedding can take place only after a daughter-in-law enters the household to help manage it. Sensitive to social ridicule yet fiercely devoted to his family, Santu feels a mix of frustration and urgency. Determined to see his sister married and to fulfill the expectations of tradition, he is willing to go to any lengths—even choices that test his morals—to find a bride.

Chandan Roy

KEMLI

Kemli is a 23-year-old young woman from a remote tribal village who has never seen the world beyond her own settlement. Raised in an environment where women are treated harshly and given little respect, she has grown up knowing only hardship and restriction. Her first journey outside the village comes when she is married to Santu, an experience that opens her eyes to a different life. At first shy and uncertain, Kemli gradually softens as she experiences Santu’s unexpected kindness. His gentle treatment stands in sharp contrast to what she has known, and over time she finds herself developing genuine affection and love for him.

Prragati Chauhaan

CHATURBHUJ (PHUPHA JI)

Santu’s uncle by marriage—his phupha ji—is a man who likes to think of himself as cleverer than most. Slightly over-smart in his manner, he carries himself with an air of self-importance and often boasts about his small but useful network of contacts in the local police and among minor political leaders. Though his influence is limited, he enjoys dropping hints about these connections, using them to impress others and occasionally to smooth small troubles for the family.

Durgesh Kumar

SANTU’S MOTHER

Santu’s mother is a 55-year-old woman who has single-handedly managed her household for years. Strong and practical, she makes all major decisions on her own and has earned quiet respect for her resilience. Her greatest wish is simple yet pressing: she wants to see Santu married so that a daughter-in-law can share the household responsibilities, after which she can arrange her daughter’s wedding with peace of mind. Despite the hardships of raising two children alone, she remains determined and unwavering, guided by a sense of duty to secure her family’s future.

Sunita Rajwar

JAMAI

Adwarf man,married to Dulari’s sister, plays a dual role in the story. Though part of the extended family by marriage, he secretly works as a middleman who arranges brides for money. Quick-witted and opportunistic, he is familiar with the hidden network of villages where impoverished families are forced to sell their daughters. It is he who takes Santu to Dulari’s village, acting as a guide and facilitator in the transaction to secure a bride. His small stature contrasts with his sharp instincts and cunning, making him a quietly pivotal link between Santu and the world of bride trafficking.

Kumar Saurav

KODULAL (KEMLI’S FATHER)

Kemli’s fatheris a 50-year-old man driven almost entirelyby greed. A habitual drinker, he shows little concern for family honor or his daughters’ well-being, caring only about the money he can extract from any situation. His alcoholism and selfishness have hardened him, making him willing to compromise morals and relationships alike if it means quick profit. For him, people—even his own children—are less important than the next drink or the next payment.

Omkar Das Manikpuri

SUKHIYA (KEMLI’S MOTHER)

Kemli’s mother is a womanof quietstrength anddeep affection.She loves her daughter fiercely and dreams of seeing her settled in a secure, respectable home. Despite living in a harsh tribal environment where women are often overlooked, she nurtures a protective instinct that sometimes turns bold. Similarly, Kemli’s mother shows the same determination for her own child—strong enough to stand up to her alcoholic husband when it comes to Kemli’s future. Both mothers embody resilience and maternal courage, willing to challenge their circumstances and even confront their own spouses to safeguard their daughters’ lives.

Sapna Sand

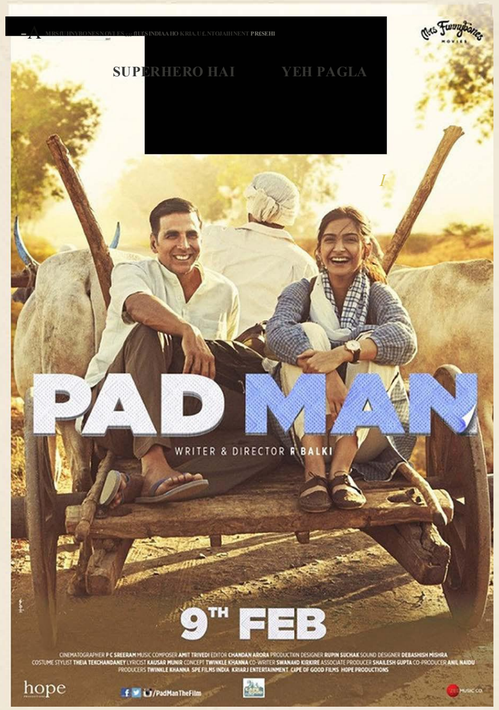

NARESH

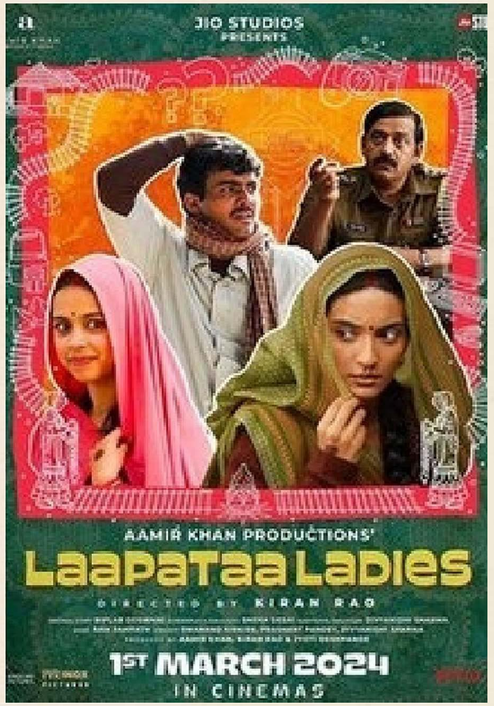

Naresh is a 32-year-old unmarried man whose desperation to marry is matched only by his arrogance. Known in his region as a bahubali—a local strongman—he clings to rigid, patriarchal beliefs and sees women as possessions rather than equals. Naresh travels to Kemli's village specifically to buy a bride and quickly sets his sights on her, treating the transaction like a conquest. When Santu later elopes with Kemli, Naresh's bruised ego turns into obsession. He grows reckless and almost unhinged, scouring the countryside in a frantic attempt to reclaim the woman he believes he owns.

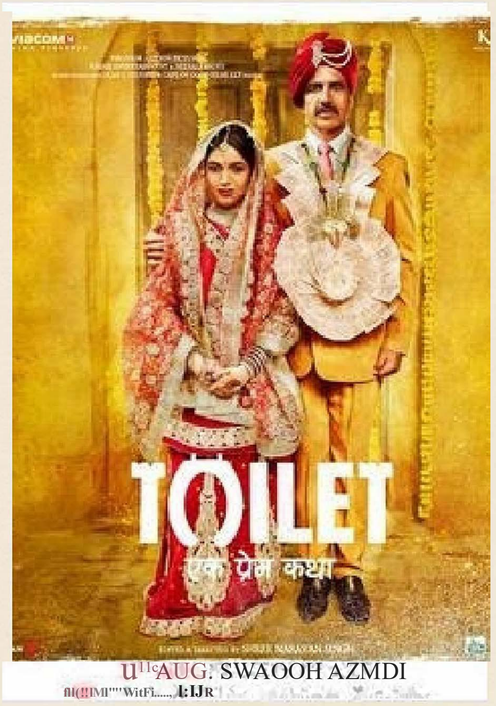

Bhaskar jha

GENERE

U11cAUG: SWAOOH AZMDI

DIRECTOR’S PROFILE:

PUSHPENDDRA SINGH

IMDB: https://www.imdb.com/name/nm9362954/?ref_=tt_ov_1_1

THANKYOU